Robert Montgomery:
Four-Time Winner

as we see it

Nothing could sound quite so dull in a program listing as "A CBS-Television Report on the President's Materials Policy Commission." Somehow it doesn't sing. It has no whammy, no umph, no zonk. So the show came up titled "Resources For Freedom." We hope that name attracted more of an audience, because the program set a high in public service features.

William S. Paley, chairman of the Commission, also happens to be chairman of the board of CBS. Convinced of the importance of what his commission had reported to the President, Mr. Paley also felt it imperative to inform the public as to the state of our natural resources, the problems facing us, and the need for action to assure a continuing supply of raw materials from at home and abroad.

With a network so handy, he had the medium to do the job. He did it well, so well that perhaps the networks will consider dramatizing other vital but formidable government documents.

These documents concern all of us, but are hardly palatable in the form of thick volumes filled with small type, complicated charts, and masses of figures. It takes an expert to read and understand them. The Paley Report was no exception, yet on television it came to life, not only as an exciting program but as a challenge to all to understand that America does depend upon the rest of the world for its existence and prosperity.

If, as has been stated time and again, an informed public is the keystone of wise government, television's graphic nature can—and should—concern itself more and more with documentary presentations.

The Paley report certainly was another step in the right direction.

TV'S Hidden Stars

Fine job! Phil Harris, shown with Anne Dore, gets $2000 a week for few shows a year.

★ They're Paid Well For Not Working

BEING a television panelist is usually considered the plushiest job in TV. The hours are short, the fame is great, the pay is good. But there's another job in TV, usually hidden from the public, that's even better. That's being a personality under contract to a network but with no show on the air, because the network has no sponsor, no time or no program to fit that personality.

At latest count, NBC had 12 such performers under contract: Tom Ewell, Ben Blue, Eddy Arnold, Cass Daley, Eddie Foy, Jr., Paul Gilbert, George Gobel, Helen Halpin, Phil Harris, the Kean Sisters, Dick Wesson and Ezio Pinza. NBC also has an option on any program starring Mickey Rooney, and a contract with noted producer Worthington (Tony) Miner, long absent from TV.

Enjoying the ABC largesse since last spring are Sammy Davis, Jr., and Joel Grey whose initial TV efforts were not slated until this month. CBS had singer Jo Stafford under contract until she launched her own show.

The list has been longer. Last spring, for example, ABC started signing new stars like Danny Thomas and Ray Bolger, and putting them on salary even though they didn't take the air until the fall. And CBS at one time had a number of show-less stars, such as Ken Murray, Alan Young and Larry Storch.

How much money each of these people gets for not working is a closely-guarded secret. It varies, of course, with the name and fame each has built in other branches of show business. But those weekly paychecks are obviously large enough to keep the performers moderately happy though "hidden." In the words of one network executive, the pay is more than just a token fee. He said it is usually "substantial."

Under various capital gains deals and contracts that might cover both radio and TV, an established personality can take home much more than a substantial check each week. Phil Harris, for example, is reportedly paid $2000 weekly by NBC for his TV work, separate and apart from what he draws for his weekly radio show. And his TV has been confined to occasional guest shots or infrequent starring roles on All Star Review.

NBC has another $2000 paycheck going out each week to Miner. He was the original producer of Studio One on CBS. But when NBC lured him over, it soon found it had no show for him. He'll soon produce the new show NBC is building for Tom Ewell, star of "Seven Year Itch" on Broadway.

Why will a network carry a non-working performer on the payroll for months? The answer is two-fold. From the standpoint of established personalities, such as Miss Stafford, the networks will sign them for competitive purposes. Since Miss Stafford has an exclusive contract with CBS, she cannot be signed by NBC.

Far more important, though, is the network's need to continually build and develop new young talent to replace the Eddie Cantors, Fred Allens and the Jimmy Durantes when they retire from the business. For this reason, the networks are constantly scouring night clubs, summer theaters and other talent sources to uncover potential stars. Signed on this basis have been most of the young contractees, such as Helen Halpin, George Gobel and Joel Grey.

NBC considers this development of young talent so important to its future that it has been mulling the establishment of a training course specifically for TV. Under this plan, the performers would be developed gradually, through planned guest appearances and actual training in dance, song and comedy. Then, when the network considered that the performer had "graduated," he would get his own show. To date, the closest it has come to this plan was spotting Gobel, Miss Halpin and others as guests on its Saturday Night Review last summer with Hoagy Carmichael.

Under an ambitious CBS plan to build a stable of young stars, each performer signed to a contract would be guaranteed a minimum of assignments each year at a minimum salary. In addition, CBS would try to line up work outside TV. Under this system the network signed Mary Sinclair, Mike Wallace and Buff Cobb. Wallace and Miss Cobb are still on CBS. Miss Sinclair left the network for a promising career with Paramount Pictures in Hollywood but has since returned to occasional featured roles on TV dramatic shows.

CBS also had its list of established performers. Besides Murray, Young and Storch, that network at one time had under contract Sam Levenson, Ginger Rogers, Paul Tripp (creator and star of the defunct Mr. I. Magination) and Abe Burrows. Of this group, only Levenson is still on CBS, as a permanent panelist on This Is Show Business.

Julius La Rosa might also be considered a pay-but-no-play performer for CBS. Since his much-publicized break with the Godfrey clan, he has been busy making money in theater and night club appearances around the country, confining his TV work to occasional guest shots on Ed Sullivan's Toast of the Town. He still has a contract with CBS, however—and that nice weekly pay check.

Mike Stokey's sign means 'quote:' Dorothy Hart's hand-at-throat identifies 'gag saying.'

How to play PANTOMIME QUIZ

MIKE STOKEY, whose Pantomime Quiz show recently moved from Hollywood to New York, probably has taught more people to play charades than any man in history, even though the game is centuries old.

Through the magic of television and the glamor of Hollywood and Broadway stars, Mike has turned the parlor game of acting out proverbs, songs and titles into an entertaining half-hour show.

But he believes that everybody can enjoy playing Pantomime Quiz at home, particularly with the aid of the "Simple Six" gestures, which are demonstrated by Dorothy Hart in the accompanying pictures.

For best results at home, Stokey suggests having three players on each team. He says it's important to line up the "stumpers" in advance, to avoid long waits while each team thinks up phrases.

In fact, Stokey is writing a book, "Pantomime Quiz at Home," which will list 150 of the best "stumpers" used on the show as an aid to those who play the game with friends.

Mike presented his first TV version of charades in 1939, during the experimental days of television, and revived it in 1947. His show provided TV debuts for such present-day stars as Lucille Ball, Eve Arden, Danny Thomas, Joan Davis and others.

One of his guests on those early shows was Gorgeous George, the wrestler, who had to act out a song title, "The Dance of the Sugar Plum Fairies." Stokey says: "If you can imagine George trying to be a sugar-plum fairy, you have a good idea of what happened to the audience."

Stokey has one firm rule: none of the stars who appear on his show are tipped off in advance as to their "stumper." A couple of well-known actors have asked for this help, so they could make a good showing. Stokey turned them down, and they were not on the show.

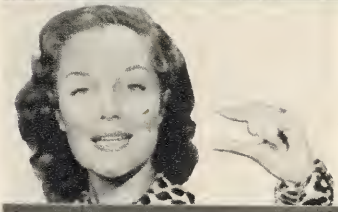
SYLLABLES: Dorothy's signal indicates following word has three syllables.

STRETCH OUT: This means add to the word: i.e. 'you' to 'your.'

SOUNDS LIKE: Tug at ear means word is like one to be acted out.

CUT DOWN: Fingers in scissors move means to shorten the word.

PAST TENSE: hand back over the shoulder changes form of verb.



LITTLE WORD: this indicates word like 'a' is the word she seeks.

GARRY MOORE:

THE RAMAR OF WEST 39th STREET

Hey, you tickle: Ivan Sanderson deals with a vulture as Garry waits nonchalantly.

Quartet: Ivan, Garry and two spoonbills enliven one TV program.

ONCE a week, an intrepid explorer-scientist named Ivan Sanderson upsets the routine at CBS-TV's Mansfield Theater on New York's West 39th Street by unloading a few wild animals on the premises.

The untamed creatures have been the glamorous and unpredictable stars of Garry Moore's daytime program for close to two years now—an exceptionally long run on the Crewcut's show. Says Garry, "We have to change our features every few months or people tire of them. Not so with the animals. They are by far our most popular feature and probably will be indefinitely."

Sanderson, a collector of rare animals, has insisted that his strange little pets, whether baby bears or man eating lizards, never be incarcerated when on camera. "This," he points out, "is a different approach from other animal shows. We want the audience to get a closer look at the animals in a more natural light and prove most are well behaved."

Bee With A Buzz

There have been some memorable moments when the creatures, strictly ad-libbers, crossed up Ivan's theory of good behavior. For example: there were the bees. To keep them close to home before airtime, Ivan and his assistant blew cigar smoke into their hive. Smoke, it seems, slows them down to a slow buzz. A stagehand, unaware of what was going on, bellowed, "Hey, you guys! You ain't suppose to be smoking in this here theate-er!" One of the bees immediately dive bombed in his direction and planted a whopping sting on his ear. The rest of the colony frolicked harmlessly on Garry's face and hands.

For the audience, the most frightful experience centered around old Mr. stork, a five-foot bird with a razor-sharp bill and an unnerving instinct for jabbing at eyes. Garry and Ivan came prepared in fencing equipment and work gloves in case Mr. Stork got frisky. Ivan went one step further. He had the bird's wings clipped to prevent its flying out into the audience.

But alas the stork, clipped flappers and all, took off just as he was introduced, and lit on the back of a woman's seat. The audience, forewarned of the bird's ferocity, went into hysterics. The unlucky gal in the hot seat, however, sat still, covering her face with her handbag. Garry and Ivan went down into the crowd, one grabbing the bird, the other his bill—and the day was saved.

Pants Leg Lionnaise

Handling the animals as he does, Sanderson's wardrobe has an alarming casualty rate. "The consumption of my clothing is enormous," says Ivan, with a decided British accent. "A baby lion once methodically chewed off the bottom of my pants leg and I eyed the little fellow in the monitor just as he took a last gulp."

It's easy for Garry and Ivan to recall their roughest customers. One, a baby bear, rates as the only animal too tough even to get on the air. Double-chained, he still threatened to break off into the audience. Then there was the giant anteater, a most ferocious and unhandsome creature, a trifle more fractious than usual because she was carrying her child.

Sure It Wasn't 'Mrs.?'

The champ of Sanderson's truculent terrors, however, was a galago, an African beastie with two tongues and a nasty jaw action. This Mr. Galago proved so tough he appeared on the Garry Moore show for three consecutive weeks. The first two times the critter broke his steel belt and chain and wire rings and took off for the rafters. The third time Sanderson dreamed up some restrainers he couldn't bite away. "But the show," said Ivan sadly, "the show was so much duller than the previous two."

Chicago Dateline

TV's Week: Biggest TV news bombshell of the week exploded when H. Leslie Atlass, CBS vice-president and manager of WBBM-TV, disclosed that CBS had purchased the Chicago Arena at 630 N. McClurg for Channel 2 telecasting purposes. This gives WBBM-TV a decided space edge over its Chicago competitors. The purchase indicates expansion of CBS' programming here with possible increase of network originations. Under consideration is a Garroway - type morning show with two hours from New York and one hour of Chi origination. Spotted for the local emcee role is Ray Rayner, whose graphic description of the attempted suicide from Tribune Tower helped WBBM-TV win the coveted TV GUIDE award for best special events show in 1953.

Bailey

While WNBQ execs were speculating that its western star, Bill Bailey, might adapt his WMAQ deejay show to TV, Channel 2 idea men shrewdly lured William to the WBBM-TV fold. He turned up this week in a starring role on the new Town and Country Song Parade (6 P.M. Saturdays).

Return of Du Mont's Music Show to the WGN-TV lineup (9 P.M. Wednesdays) gives Channel 9 a hefty midweek music schedule. Chicago Symphony, Music Show and Liberace all contribute to the harmony parade.

Be sure to watch for the series of editorial features on each of the TV GUIDE award winners. First article, on Howard Miller, will appear in the Feb. 5 issue.

Advance Tips on Shows: WBKB is planning an afternoon schedule alteration. In the offing: return of Bob and Ray in a 15-minute late afternoon segment and addition of the Jerry Lester network show for a mid-afternoon variety hour. Channel 7 execs hint at an early February date for the change.

Johnson	1st	42	5	0	20
Slade	7th	18	8	4	4

This is a return match. Last year on January 16th, Johnson won an easy one-side victory over Slade in this same arena. This match will have a strong bearing on the future of the light-heavyweight division. The winner should be the most logical contender for the title which was defended an Wednesday. Jahnson is a finished boxer, not in the sense that he has reached the end of the trail, but in the sense that he knaws the whys and wherefores of all the moves in boxing. He can box and punch with the best in this class, and loaks like a sure winner here.

7 BOXING—Richmond, Calif.
Wes Echols vs. Joe Miceli, welterweights, 10 rounds.

JIMMY POWERS' RATING

	Rated	W	L	D	KO's
Echols	Not	17	1	0	11
Miceli	Not	38	15	4	19

Echols is a new face on TV. He is a good-looking prospect in the Bobo Olson stable. On his number of bouts, it would be almost suicide to pick against the experienced Miceli, but Joe has been on the sidelines for five months, with a recent stort ot Holyoke which he won in two rounds. This inactivity and the newness of boxing in strange California may be a serious foctor to consider. Wes is touted os o real find, and knowing the careful handling of monager Sid Floherty, I'll go olong with his thinking and pick for the hometown boxer, Echols.

Show Sidelights: William Bendix, as troupers do, appeared on the show despite a bad virus illness . . . The gown worn by Jayne Meadows on the show was personally designed by the titian-haired actress . . . Bogeyman Ken Nordine confessed "I'm frightened" when presented with his award . . . Clint Youle gave weather facts and a warning to motorists in his acceptance speech . . . Comic Tom D'Andrea, making a surprise visit, insisted on getting an award or having his parking stub validated . . . Joe Wilson's wife came to the show unaware that Joe had won and cried when his name was announced . . . Lee Schooler's Press Conference was the only show, not currently seen, that won an award . . . Many verbal posies were tossed by viewers over the novel way of introducing the champions via their spotlighted silhouette . . . Francois Pope paid homage to Mrs. Pope and sons, Frank and Bob, in accepting his statuette . . . Howard Miller got the most tremendous hand when he was announced as winner of the Top Favorite Show award.

L. to r., Mike Douglas, Danny O'Neil, Joe Wilson and Mal Bellairs try to out-boast each other about their trophies, at party following show. Onlooker is Al DiBitetto.

William Bendix, Jayne Meadows, and TV-press columnist Irv Kupcinet huddle in corner for an intimate chat.

We are proud of: Director Grover J. Allen, lighting engineer Bob Christiansen, audio man Frank Genereaux, production men John Fitzpatrick, and Gary Nathanson, Jim Moran, and TV GUIDE's Ed Pazdur. We are sorry: that so many people — over 2,000 — were turned away from the studio because the theater was filled to capacity.

PROGRAM OF THE WEEK

Motorola TV Hour

Maria Riva and Jack Palance: they got a new program off to an impressive start.

WHILE not yet in the same class with the late lamented Celanese Theater, ABC-TV's new Motorola TV Hour is nonetheless a worthy addition to the hour-long drama ranks. In its first three outings it displayed a commendable versatility, along with a penchant for name players, and even ventured into the difficult realm of fantasy.

For the opener, the producers chose a somewhat routine Iron Curtain plot, "Brandenburg Gate," the story of a not-quite-believable modern Sidney Carton who gave his life to save his true love's husband. Jack Palance played both male leads opposite Maria Riva, a neat bit of casting which pulled the play up by its own bootstraps. Following this rather heavy-handed piece came "At Ease," a comedy tailor-made for the not-too-considerable talents of Brian Donlevy. He played a Regular Army topkick shanghaied into being headmaster of a small military school, and got away with it quite nicely.

As a complete change of pace, not always evident in some of the better known dramatic shows, the Motorola TV Hour also presented James Thurber's "The Thirteen Clocks," a pleasant little fantasy enormously enhanced by the presence of Sir Cedric Hardwicke, a past master of the miming art. While this show suffered somewhat from a paucity of sets, Hardwicke and Basil Rathbone more than carried it.

With its emphasis on names, the show has not yet offered any really memorable scripts. But this is a new venture for ABC. It needs the kind of experience which can be gained only over a period of time. Judging from the shows presented thus far, the lessons of experience will be quickly learned, and the program will consistently rank with the best in television's crowded dramatic field.

DOLLAR A SECOND

Tough: with Jan Murray directing, woman threads needle as man does pushups.

DOLLAR A SECOND, Du Mont's entry in the quiz-'em-fool-'em-kick-'em school of entertainment, is neither better nor worse than its 4,678 predecessors. Neither does it set up any particular standards, if that's the word, for its inevitable successors in this vastly over-worked field.

This one is emceed by Jan Murray, a brash young man of darkish good looks who has the meaningless patter down to the point where it seems to be completely automatic. He poses the questions and the stunts to the hapless but apparently willing victim, who collects a dollar a second until he either conks out via his own misadventure or gets conked out by another contestant who is trying to accomplish some impossible stunt such as placing 12 kittens on 12 different stools simultaneously.

As if this weren't enough, the poor victim is given a choice of five bottles to empty or ropes to pull or buzzers to ring every time he misses a question. One of the five gimmicks is loaded—sometimes with a bath of ketchup, sometimes with a free if sudden trip into a pool of water. If he empties or pulls or buzzes the loaded gimmick, he's through. Meanwhile the seconds tick on, and the dollars add up.—D. J.

FINE TUNING

By OLLIE CRAWFORD

ADVERTISING agency uses hypnotism to test ads. With hypnotism, why do the ads need testing?

The eyeball will be as important to TV announcers as the teeth.

He can just say: "Look me in the eye. Now float down to your neighborhood grocery and . . . ." He can make a few magic passes and say: "Forget, forget, forget, but DON'T forget to get Crispy-Wunchies."

All a sponsor needs is a hypnotist to say: "Sleep, sleep, sleep, and wake up with an Astro Alarm Clock."

It won't be long until the guy who does the commercial is sawing people in half, instead of just boring them. When Swami Ali is doing the commercial, just TRY to touch that dial.

A guy can be watching TV and wake up with a 148-piece dinner set and 12 free napkins.

An announcer friend of ours can put people to sleep, but he hasn't managed the rest of the trick.

Man OF MANY PARTS

ACTOR, DIRECTOR, PRODUCER, CRUSADER— MONTGOMERY HANDLES ALL ROLES WITH APLOMB

A FEW years back, Ronald Colman called Robert Montgomery the most graceful actor in the business. Mr. Colman, hardly in the awkward category himself, went on to say, "His every gesture is superb. In fact, he's the only man I know of who doesn't have to pull up the legs of his trousers before sitting down."

Mr. Colman's testimony brought to light an uncelebrated facet of Mr. Montgomery's many-sided talent, and underlined what is in constant evidence: the elegant aplomb Bob brings to everything he does. With Bob, as anyone knows who has watched his unruffled performance on his Monday night drama series, nothing ever goes wrong. Well, hardly ever.

But a short while ago, Bob must have been thinking of politics as he narrated a show featuring a fine performance by actress Teresa Wright. When Miss Wright returned for the usual round of congratulations and what's-on-for-next-week, Montgomery persistently called her Martha Scott, another capable actress who was nowhere around that evening. A few weeks later an abashed Montgomery informed his viewers that he had committed a spectacular blooper.

Montgomery, producer and director, as distinguished from Montgomery, actor, is strictly a postwar development. Bob is one of that rare breed of actors with creative abilities so abundant they burgeon out in all fields of dramatic art. Discharged from the Navy in 1944 with a fine war record, Bob was put in a film that was noteworthy for accurate casting. The movie was "They Were Expendable," with Montgomery as a PT boat skipper, his job during the war.

Director John Ford became ill before the film was completed and Bob took over. From then on there was no stopping him.

When Montgomery came East in 1949 to head his TV show, rumor had it that he was merely a front man. Though Bob doesn't get involved in all the technical detail that harasses many producers, he does have a great deal to do with the overall supervision of his show, including the choice of scripts and casts.

Despite his tremendous ability, Bob sometimes gets off the beam. Before "Late Love," the show in which his daughter Elizabeth is currently appearing, opened on Broadway, Bob went up to see the show's New Haven tryout. His pre-Broadway decision: The show would run a brisk 10 days. It's still running, proving that Producer Montgomery, paid for his judgment of what constitutes a good show, can be as wrong as anybody.

It is almost a ritual for an actor abandoning Hollywood to unleash a few parting blasts at the cultural stagnation of Movieland. Montgomery, who put in 20 years there, considers those days the happiest of his life. As he says, "I worked hard. It was full of disappointment and joy, discouragements and rewards. I'll be forever grateful for all those wonderful years."

The Lady Lost Her Head

Probably Bob's most notable triumph was his performance as Denny in "Night Must Fall," a part in which he carried a young lady's head around in a satchel. Previous to this film (1938), he had been cast in dozens of movies as a charming wastrel.

Bob does little acting now, and only on his TV show. With the right part he'd make another movie, but not just to appear on the screen again.

Montgomery has become a figure of note outside the dramatic field in recent years. He's a wheel in the Republican Party, and it was said that if Dewey had been elected in 1948, Bob would have rated a cabinet position.

Let's See, Now—Who Else . . .

Bob's outspoken radio commentary a few years ago was another tenet of the Montgomery plan for a rich, full life. His favorite target: the alliance between crime and politics.

On the show he once demanded "Get Costello out of the country," referring to gambler Frank Costello. A lady fan from New England wrote in complete accord: "I agree with you. And while you're at it, get rid of that awful Abbott, too."

Bob also got into hot water when he accused a big city politician of a tie-up with the gangs. Though Montgomery's insurance company paid off out of court, feeling that he lacked evidence, Bob says he'll be glad to repeat the charges, any time, any place.

All this would seem to stamp Montgomery as a crusader, but the name infuriates him. Instead, he says, "It's just a matter of setting a trap for rats. It's a community project. When you find out that something is wrong, you go out and do something."

Somehow Montgomery still finds time to be an active member of the board of Macy's department store, of New York society and of the sport car crowd. And right now he's off on a new tack. His next idea for improving the country is to improve the country's newspapers, which he contends, for the most part, are now too passive, without fighting editors. He loves a fighting newspaper and feels that without it the U.S. has lost some of its flavor. And that's the latest crusade for non-crusading Montgomery.

HOW TO WRITE TV SCRIPTS

PROBABLY every television drama fan has said to himself at one time or another: "That show was terrible. Bet I could write a better one myself." Well, if you can, the producers of the top dramatic shows on TV would be happy to get them.

Teresa Lewis, script editor for Fred Coe, who produces TV Playhouse, for example, gets about 200 unsolicited scripts each month. They come flooding across her desk from housewives, department store clerks, elevator operators, icemen, and about everyone else who owns a television set.

These scripts are read, even though it represents a king-sized task for Miss Lewis and her staff. Some of them aren't typewritten, but turned out in longhand that is frequently illegible. A few have been submitted on tape or phonograph record as a means of getting extra attention.

Teresa Lewis: 200 scripts a month.

And, of all these, only one was considered worthy of Playhouse presentation. The show is "A Game of Hide and Seek," and it is not the work of a novice. It was written by James P. Miller, of Flushing, N.Y., author of a number of magazine stories.

In the interest of would-be TV writers, Miss Lewis has compiled the Do's and Don't's printed on the opposite page as a guide to preparing better scripts.

DO be sure your material will sustain the full time of the show. Any play accepted for presentation on Playhouse must have sufficient material to sustain viewers' interest for a full hour. Too often, Miss Lewis pointed out, she has received scripts that are built around a single idea, impossible to embellish. The idea might be stretched enough to provide a good half-hour's drama. But in padding it out to an hour's length, the padding becomes more obvious than the idea and so the entire story is worthless to Playhouse.

DON'T write farce. The Playhouse cannot use it, although some other shows will. "The reason is simple," Miss Lewis said. "We have no audience in the Playhouse studio. And it's no secret that actors in a farce show must have a live audience so they can time their lines."

DON'T over-plot your story. This may sound like a contradiction of the rule above, but actually is not. "Something must happen to the characters in a play during the hour," Miss Lewis said. "But that doesn't mean putting your characters through all sorts of intricate plot maneuvers."

DO be sure your play has three good curtain lines. "Because we must break for a commercial three times during each show," Miss Lewis said, "we must divide each play into three acts. And just as a playwright in the legitimate theater strives for a good curtain line to bring the audience back after each intermission, we have a good curtain line to hold their interest."

DON'T use too many characters. A good TV play, just as a good Broadway show or a good movie, cannot have too many characters important to the story. Playhouse may use a mob scene if it's absolutely necessary, Miss Lewis said. "But we cannot have too many central characters because it's impossible to establish them all in an hour. They only tend to confuse the story. It would be best to confine your chief characters to two or three."

DO keep the number of sets required to a minimum. The Playhouse, as well as all other live TV shows, is adamant against the use of too many sets in a single show. A multiplicity of sets tends to confuse the basic story line, just as too many lead characters would, and the show's budget makes it impossible. In this way, TV is more closely allied to the theater than to movies.

DO stay away from soap opera themes. Playhouse has no objections to soap operas on TV. The show merely objects to soap operas on Playhouse. As Miss Lewis put it, "We're not interested in doing stories about accidents, paralysis, brain operations, etc." This is a flexible rule, of course.

DO stay within the confines of good taste. There is no objection to dealing with "tear-jerker" themes in a story. But they must form an integral part of the story, not be dragged in just to add emotional impact, and they must be presented in good taste. Playhouse devoted an entire show once to blindness, but not as it might be treated in a soap opera. It was a biographical story of Louis Braille, dealing with his development of the Braille system.

DO be sure your actors can be believed in terms of their characterizations. This rule applies specifically to Playhouse. Unlike most other dramatic series on TV, Playhouse seldom will hire a famous movie or Broadway star for a lead in its show. As a result, it cannot, as other programs do, rely on the stereotype already associated with a star in movies or on the stage.

REGIONAL RECIPES:

Barbecue Sauce: A Texas Favorite

By Margret McDonald

Miss McDonald is the cooking expert on WBAP-TV in Fort Worth

DURING the wild and woolly 1870's, when the great cattle herds were being driven north from Texas to the Kansas railheads, the cowboys often had nothing to eat except the very cattle they were driving.

To make the meat more palatable, the cowboys used to barbecue it and then soften it up with a sauce. Probably the first such barbecue sauce consisted of nothing more than stewed tomatoes dumped over the meat.

Margret McDonald selected Texas Barbecue Sauce for TV GUIDE readers because it is the most typical of Texas foods.

It is also the very first recipe she ever learned. It was passed on to her from her pioneer grandmother.

Miss McDonald now offers it, in a somewhat refined form, together with an appropriate menu. She includes a green salad which shows the Mexican influence on Texas eating habits.

Texas Barbecue Sauce

1 medium onion, minced; 2 T. butter or margarine; 2 T. vinegar; 2 T. brown sugar; 4 T. lemon juice; 1 c. catsup; ½ c. chopped parsley; 2 t. horseradish-mustard; ½ c. water; 2 T. Worcestershire; salt to taste; dash Cayenne pepper or chili powder.

Saute onion. Add ingredients; simmer 30 minutes. Baste ribs, steak, or chicken with the sauce. Serve with green salad (lettuce, tomato, onion, celery, green pepper, avocado, oil-vinegar-Roquefort dressing), baked beans, hard rolls, hot coffee, pecan pie.

In the WBAP-TV kitchen, Miss McDonald gathers the makings of a tempting meal.

The hero of this sad tale is Nate Tush, chief repairman for a major TV wholesaler in Los Angeles. Tush fixed TV sets for five years before he reached his present position, and he still broods over past difficulties. Here's his story, as told to Bill Dauch.

A TV Repairman Talks Back

IT'S IMPOSSIBLE to pick up a magazine or newspaper today which doesn't carry at least one "exposé" story on the men in my profession. I am—if you'll pardon the expression—a television repair expert, and I am taking this rare opportunity to point out that there are just as many unethical customers as there are repairmen. Maybe more.

Perhaps the most troublesome customer is the "mechanic." This worthy gentleman has purchased a TV manual which bares the innermost secrets of home electronics. He waits with bated breath for the set to go wrong so he can prove the fallacies of paying good money to "racketeers."

His great chance finally arrives. Instead of Arthur Godfrey he gets zigzag lines. ZOWIE! In a trice he is behind the set, manual in one hand, screw driver in the other. Two hours later, he calls one of us in.

The upshot is that what would have been a simple tube exchange now becomes a major operation. And what a yell he lets out when you hand him a bill for the damage he caused!

Then there's the personal friend who invites you over for a nice social evening. Dinner and all, mind you! Along about coffee-time, he suddenly remembers his TV set hasn't been working very well lately. The picture's been flipping over and over—well, come over here a minute and see what he means. Guess what the repairman ends up doing for free?

Some people are just fine as you work over their machines. When you finish, they accept your bill without question and bid you a cheery adieu. Two weeks later your phone rings angrily. It's one of the happiness boys. He's really an outraged citizen now.

"—What did you do to make my set burn out a tube just now? Well, I have news for you. I'll be ding-danged if I'll pay you one red cent, sir!"

But the client that really makes us pull in our heads is the worry-wart. Usually, she's a lady. Her eyes are big as saucers when she opens the door for you. And those same eyes stare distrustfully at you all the time you're on the premises. She's been warned that the only good TV repairman is a dead one, that all of 'em try to switch parts.

She hovers over your shoulder in a fashion that would give a sardine claustrophobia. And she pounces upon every part you take out of the set with bulldog ferocity. This is one time you're not going to get away with any didos, you bet you!

Of course, all this makes the human race look pretty sad, doesn't it? Well, it's really not meant that way. The gay group we've just chased over the coals is a very small portion of the TV public . . . very small, indeed. The majority are people who treat us just as if we were normal human beings trying to do our jobs.

IN THE CAST

Gisele MacKenzie: 'one-fifth' Scotch.

THE Hit Parade, a longtime advocate of the two-platoon system where girl singers are concerned, has come up with a new companion for Dorothy Collins, this time a lusty contralto named Gisele MacKenzie.

It is reliably reported that the bosses are happy with her work, so Gisele can be expected to escape the fate of last year's June Valli and the previous year's Eileen Wilson, both of whom found themselves ex-Hit Paraders after their respective seasons.

Things almost went haywire for her as soon as she got her job. Gisele owns a couple of dachshunds and parked them in her dressing room the night of her first show. Sharing the room is Dorothy Collins and, after the show, Gisele returned to find one of the rascals had been at work, chewing up a new $30 pair of Dorothy's shoes. Dorothy was very kind about it. However the thought of the incident still makes Gisele wince.

Pint Size Pianist

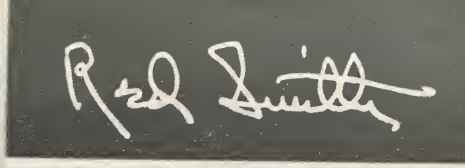
Gisele, out of Winnepeg, Canada, refers to her ancestry as four-fifths French and a fifth Scotch. She has been in the music business since she was three and her mother found her pecking away at a piano. Her father, a physician with hopes that one of his children would become a violinist, turned her loose on that instrument.

Her violin career went well until her fourth year in Toronto's Royal Conservatory of Music when she met Bob Shuttleworth, a Navy bandleader, who persuaded her to sing at a naval barracks and, later, as a civilian, hired her for his orchestra.

The next step was stardom on Canadian and U. S. radio, and then to the Hit Parade.

Gisele has also made nice coin via singing engagements at some of the Nation's top night clubs. This work has been circumscribed recently by her chores on the Hit Parade, but since she rehearses only three days for the show, she will soon return to the night club campaigns.

SPORTS



How to lose TV sponsors

ON the day the National Collegiate Athletic Association voted to continue its controls on live telecasts of football games through 1954, the papers carried reports that the sponsor was getting fed up and might pull out. This was mere coincidence, but it pointed up the fact that a showdown is approaching when the colleges can no longer have their cake and eat it.

Up to now, college football has got by with a program that fought off television as a major competitor of the box office, and at the same time derived revenue from television. Now it appears that the business of playing both ends against the middle is heading for a collapse.

The NCAA plan allowing for one national telecast per week has won wide and richly merited unpopularity among the public, whose interests it ignored. The colleges, however, have managed to face this with equanimity as long as they could do lively business at the gate and cut up a slice of TV swag to boot.

A commercial sponsor necessarily takes another point of view. If he has an unpopular program, potential customers tune it out and he doesn't get the "penetration of the market" (ad agency English) which he pays for.

Apparently General Motors has been made aware of the public dissatisfaction with a plan that offers a contest between Brigham Young and Utah as the "game-of-the-week" for National consumption. It is reported that GM may dump the show back into the NCAA's lap. There is doubt another sponsor would foot the bill.

In that event, the anti-television bloc which has been dictating NCAA policy would have to make a choice: either adopt a more liberal TV policy which would be more palatable to public and sponsors, or drop TV altogether and sacrifice all income from that source.

An attempt to do the latter would almost certainly bring about a revolt in NCAA ranks. The minority group in the Association that has been reluctantly settling for a stale slice instead of the whole loaf, would not hold still for a total blackout. Some schools greatly admire TV both as a source of revenue and as a medium for public relations promotion.

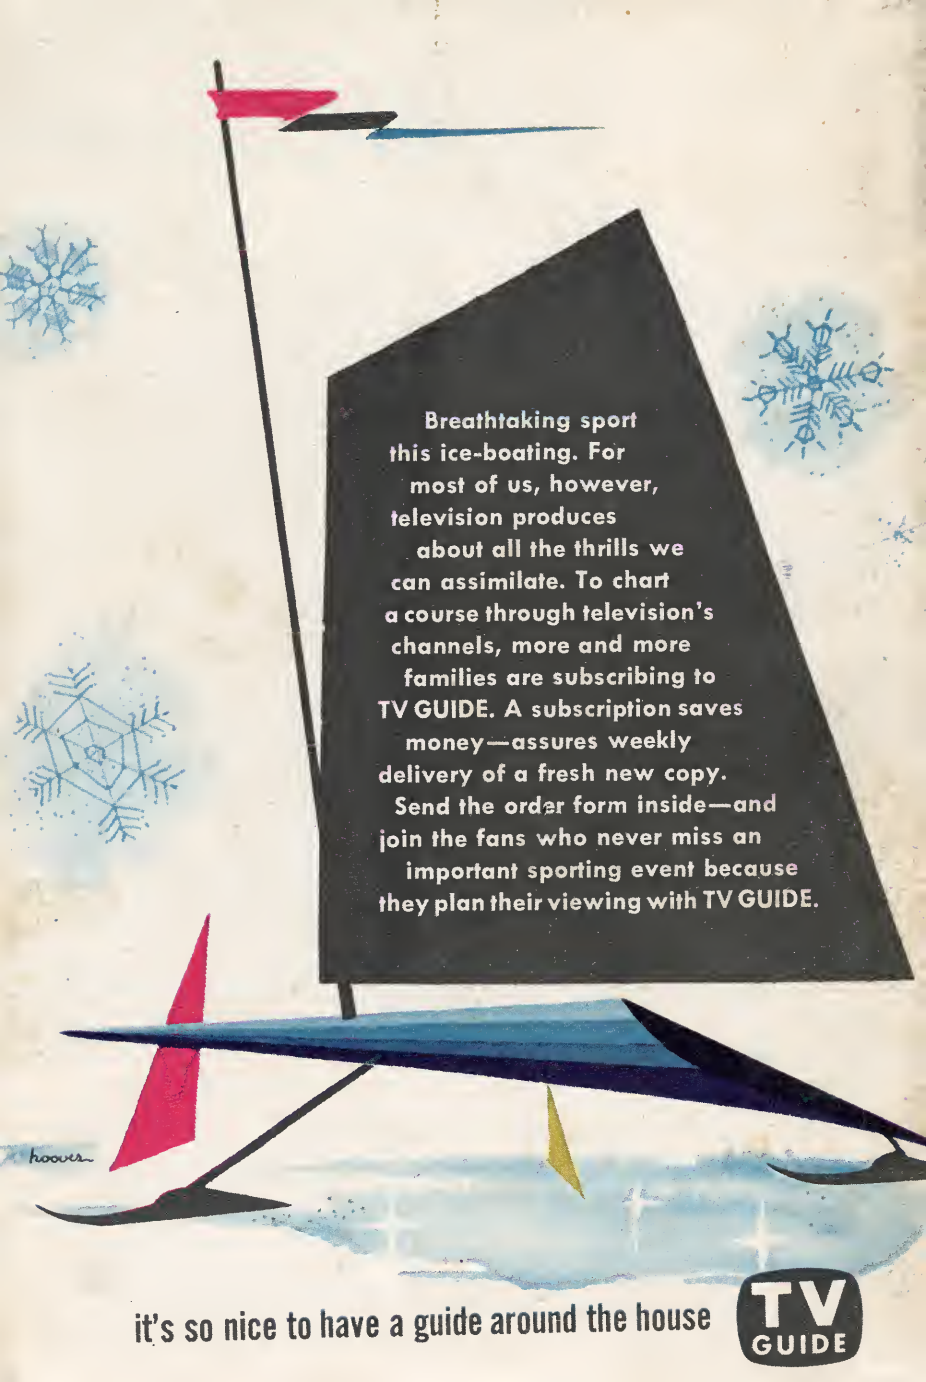
The fundamental fault of the NCAA program is that it is designed to serve the interests of the group without consideration for the preferences of the public. There is a notion that a TV set owner is entitled to no voice in the matter, since he pays nothing to watch the show.

Perhaps that view is entirely fair, but it doesn't work out that way. If the viewer doesn't like the show, then the sponsor doesn't sell his product and when that happens the source of revenue dries up. In the long run, the customer has the loudest voice of all.



Breathtaking sport this ice-boating. For most of us, however, television produces about all the thrills we can assimilate. To chart a course through television's channels, more and more families are subscribing to TV GUIDE. A subscription saves money—assures weekly delivery of a fresh new copy.
